Repeat, with extension leading to fortissimo climax

Middle section, part 1 Contrasting theme

Middle section, part 1. Contrasting theme

Middle section, part 2. Theme lapses into minor 6th chords, as reason begins to surrender to emotion

Middle section, part 3. Tritones and minor 7ths. Tonality disintegrates, as emotion takes over

Etude No. 3

- Chopin's original tempo marking was vivace!
 - He later changed it to Vivace ma non troppo
 - "Lively, but not too lively."
 - Today it has a completely different marking.
 - Lento ma non troppo*, "Slow, but not too slow."
 - In official Paderewski edition, published by Chopin Institute, Warsaw.
 - This is how it is played today.
 - I have seen no satisfactory explanation of this.
 - My guess: Chopin realized the true nature of the music only after he wrote it.

Appearance of 7th modulates to subdominant and anticipates recapitulation

6

Tempo slows for passage of great tenderness

Descending line in counterpoint with melody

Beautiful appoggiaturas and suspensions, creating major 7 chords

"Chimes" now widely imitated.
